

Vineyards have thrived in Ohio since the early 19th century and winemaking is becoming a more important part of Ohio's great agricultural industry.

Anyone involved in winery operations, especially those open to the public for tastings and with food service, must be aware of Ohio's environmental regulations.

Environmental compliance assures the health of our communities and helps protect your crops and business. Noncompliance can result in great expense both from monetary penalties and expensive upgrades.

Attend this free seminar to learn how to maintain compliance with environmental regulations and get insights on the issues faced by wineries, especially public drinking water and wastewater.

What Will I Learn?

- What is a public drinking water system?
- What do I have to do if my winery is a public drinking water source?
- How do I protect my drinking water?
- What are the requirements for my wastewater if my winery is not tied to a public sewer?
- If my winery expands, what environmental regulations must I consider?
